There was once a no-ble lov-er, who would now he said with much endeavor, mai- den how-er 'neath the cov-er of a cle-ver, will you ev-er be my bow-er, wife, —

As each night he went to I will love you as no call up-on his love, oth-er lov-er would,

His sweet I - tal-ian Tur-tle Dove, For you I'd do all that I could,

He'd sing a At first she wit-ty lit-tle dit-ty, to his tar-ried but they mar-ried, she'll be pret-ty lit-tle la-dy for an car-ried down the hap-py stream of hour, — life, —

Then from her tower she would shower him a flower, While he sang his serenade so quaint.
Now they go riding and a gliding while he's guiding You can hear him sing to her once more.

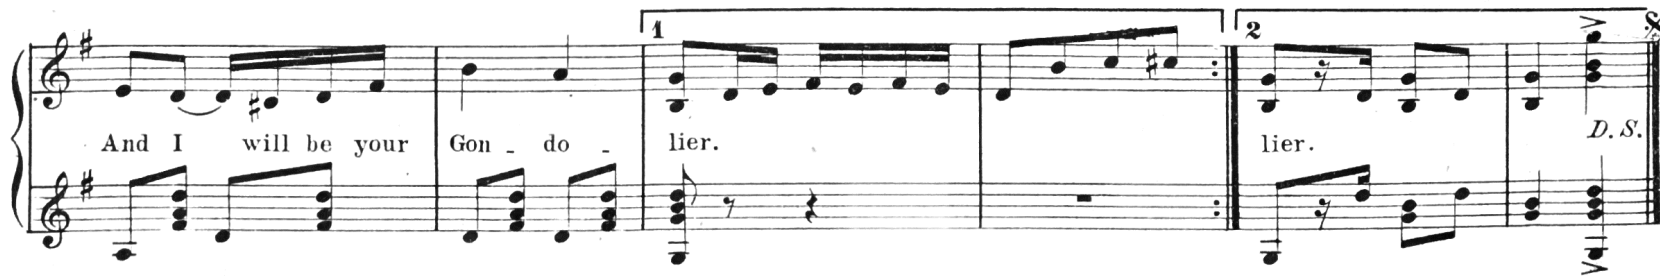

Chorus.

My sweet Venetian daughter, queen of the streets of water, by stars that shine above you,

I swear that I will love you, If you will go a-boat-ing, through life we'll go a float-ing,

And I will be your Gondolier. And I will be your Gondolier. D.S.
